

I see no reason why XM or any other type of satellite company would not be allowed to provide local content. Are local markets suggesting that if I want to find local information when I travel I should try to figure out what their radio stations are to get this content? Sounds more dangerous when driving (i.e., truck drivers) to be hunting for a station that MIGHT provide this information.

Satellite TV can provide some local programming so why can't XM?